The UMC Tomotherapy Project modifies an existing linear accelerator room to accommodate new equipment. Although the room was somewhat undersized for current equipment requirements, the design was modified to accommodate critical clearances and design requirements without requiring demolition of the existing concrete vault structure.

UMC asked the Shirtweaver team to take over the project and see it through construction on an expedited schedule when the design architect passed away. We worked closely with the contractor and equipment supplier to get the project built on time and within budget, despite the difficult circumstances and expedited schedule.

The project was completed at the end of October, 2007, approximately two weeks ahead of schedule and well within equipment delivery schedules.
